Why use video conferencing?

When time and distance are roadblocks to communication and productivity, video conferencing is an excellent tool for bridging people together with a visual message. Video teleconferencing is a highly effective communications tool that allows for simultaneous information sharing among people at different locations.

Video conferencing is currently available via several technologies. For example, video conferencing can be as simple as a desktop video meeting between two people sharing a spreadsheet. Or it may be a satellite-delivered video teleconference reaching a large statewide or even national audience with specialized training.

Video teleconferencing saves travel, reduces "down time," supports enhanced visual communication tools, provides for timely exchange of information and increases productivity.

A number of state facilities are equipped with one or more video teleconferencing technologies. Many are available to users from other state agencies or institutions.

Why use VITA?

Virginia Information Technologies Agency's video services provide Virginia government with state-of-the-art alternatives to the traditional face-to-face meetings. VITA has access to a variety of cost-effective video technology solutions for your special application.

Current VITA video charges are an average of 25 percent less than other commercial video services. When you factor in the travel and personnel costs you avoid, coupled with enhanced and timely communication, that can mean big savings for your agency.

Once you know the purpose of your meeting, VITA's staff will work with you on the best way to reach your target participants, using the right technology and best facilities for your video meeting needs. Or if you need on-premise facilities, VITA can provide information on the different types of equipment and services available.
